I have a love for historic preservation and interior design. I love taking an old, tired space or piece of furniture and making it beautiful. My husband, Will, and I live in an older home in Lexington, and we have spent many an afternoon and late night bringing it back to life, brightening everything from its walls and floors to its flower beds. Our shared dream is to one day own a Victorian-era home, taking pride in doing all of the restoration work ourselves. We also hope to liven up our garage by restoring a classic Shelby Cobra convertible.

In addition to design and architecture, I also enjoy traveling to exciting new places and taking as many pictures as possible along the way. Although I have always appreciated the art of photography, my interest in becoming an amateur photographer grew infinitely after taking a photography class focusing on architecture while studying abroad in Italy. Learning more about creating a scene and capturing different lights and feelings changed my “eye” for the better, and now I am perfectly content spending an afternoon wandering through a new city, snapping shots of interesting architecture and sampling the best ice cream she can find. To me, an afternoon like this could only be better if my two dogs, Tuscan and Bella, join me along my stroll.
